(Continuation of my earlier remark about how the World War II war on Japan was very much an exceedingly fierce war on the Japanese people.) Then, on the morning of August 6, 1945, in the sky above the Japanese city of Hiroshima, the United States government & its allies gave their "reply" as suddenly, "there was no sky. *"

(Continuation of my earlier remark about how the World War II war on Japan was very much an exceedingly fierce war on the Japanese people.) During this period, when Japan was being "put to the torch," significant parts of its government realized that their war was lost and wanted out from it. As Communist Russia was still then officially neutral to Japan, for several months, they

(Continuation of my earlier remark about how the World War II war on Japan was very much an exceedingly fierce war on the Japanese people.) All sides in the conflict had had and had employed incendiary/fire bombs. In 1942, the US developed a new one called "Napalm"; it was made by taking an extremely flammable substance, usually gasoline, and condensing it into a
